October 2018ArchiveRecommended shows War Documentary hosted by Kate Fleetwood, published by BBC in 2018 - English narration [edit] Information Three-part series delving into the story of the Assad dynasty. [edit] Part 1 Right at the centre of it are President Bashar and his wife Asma, who met and fell in love in London. Over a decade ago, they were being welcomed with open arms in Britain. Today, they are entrenched in a brutal war that has led to some of the most horrifying crimes of modern times. Episode one follows Bashar and Asma's journey to become president and first lady of Syria against the backdrop of a troubled and suspicious family. [edit] Part 2 The former eye doctor is now president and his British-born wife is first lady, but they face problems on all sides and their regime is accused of killing a political enemy. [edit] Part 3 While his wife appears in Vogue magazine, the Syrian president must decide how to act as Arab Spring protests reach Syria's streets. The brutality this unleashes shocks the world. And that he owed it to his father to fight for continuing power and not to just walk away." And so Anisa's tactic of "using the ghost of his father as leverage to give him a spine to fight on" would win out. Syria had been run as a family business since 1970 when brutal Hafez took control of the country, creating a cult of personality in which the presidency controlled every aspect of public life. Those who pushed back were crushed; the survival of the regime, and power of the Assad clan to flourish, was everything. For Bashar, formerly third choice for the premiership, it could have been so different. His eldest brother Bassel had already been lined up as Syria's next president, allowing Bashar to pursue his passion for medicine. In the early 1990s he travelled to London to study ophthalmology; he would continue to eat at Syria's top table, but would not need to get involved in the grubbiess of running a Middle East dictatorship. Bashar arrived in London as an eligible bachelor, and it was there he met Asma, a young computer science graduate from Acton, West London. In 1994, however, their blossoming relationship was cut short when the 29-year-old was summoned back to Syria. Bassel – himself second choice for the presidency after Hafez's brother Rifaat had attempted a coup a decade earlier, and then been exiled – had died in an accident while driving one of his many sports cars in Damascus. Bashar, as the next eldest son, was put on the fast track to take over from his ailing father. Though Bushra, Bashar's sister, had huge power in the family – it was rumoured she was her father's favourite child, and a more suitable person for the top job – Syria was not ready for a female president. Dennis Ross, one of Bill Clinton's Middle East peace negotiators who knew Hafez well, explained: "I think he thinks his daughter is stronger than Bashar. But in his society it can't be his daughter."
